As noted by anthropologist Robert Leach, it is dangerous that the study of national character may have a negative effect on us. He says that with a national trait is a stereotype, which can limit and prevent that gives the character a simple image that says they are, to illustrate the point they made. They can have about a character's structure and personality from the surface, and it does not follow the character.

Micro-arrays are used to study the global expression levels of the whole genome. A schematic of this process is shown in Figure 1. The first step is to extract total RNA from a sample. This is followed by the process of labeling the RNA with a fluorescent dye. The labeled RNA is then hybridized to a microarray chip. The chip contains thousands of small spots, each representing a different gene. The fluorescence intensity of each spot is measured, and this provides information about the expression level of the corresponding gene. The data is then analyzed using statistical methods to identify genes that are up-regulated or down-regulated in the sample of interest.
