

A battery may be charged at any rate which does not cause the electrolyte temperature of any cell to exceed 125° F. and which does not cause excessive gassing and loss of the electrolyte.

A fast charger cannot be expected to fully charge a battery within an hour, but will charge the battery sufficiently so that it may be returned to service and then fully charged by the car's charging system, provided the car is operated a sufficient length of time.

Frozen Electrolyte

A $\frac{3}{4}$ charged automotive battery is in no danger of damage from freezing. Therefore, keep batteries at $\frac{3}{4}$ charge or more, especially during winter weather.

A battery in which the electrolyte is either "slushy" or frozen should be replaced. Batteries with this condition, depending on the severity of the freeze, may accept and retain a charge and even perform satisfactorily under a load test. However, after 120 to 150 days in service a reduction in capacity and service life will become apparent as the individual plates lose their active material.

Specific Gravity (Corrected to 80° F.)	Freezing Temperature Degrees Fahrenheit
1.270	-84°F.
1.250	-62°F.
1.200	-16°F.
1.150	+ 5°F.
1.100	+ 19°F.

Battery Maintenance

IMPORTANT: Always observe the correct polarity. Reversed battery connections may damage the alternator diodes.

The NEGATIVE battery terminal is connected to the engine.

It is very important that the battery is in a fully charged condition when the owner receives his car or when a replacement battery is installed. The continual operation of a partially charged battery could shorten its life.

Fluid level in the battery should be checked periodically and replenished with distilled water, if possible. However, drinking water free of high mineral content may be used. In extremely hot weather, check more frequently. Add water to each cell until the liquid level reaches the bottom of the vent well. DO NOT OVERFILL!

The engine should be operated immediately after adding water, particularly in cold weather, to assure proper mixing of the water and acid.

The external condition of the battery and the cables should be checked periodically.

The hold-down should be kept tight enough to prevent the battery from shaking so as not to damage the battery case. It should not be tightened to the point where the battery case will be placed under a severe strain.

Particular care should be taken to see that the top of the battery is free of acid film and dirt between the battery terminals. For best results when cleaning the battery, wash with a diluted ammonia or soda solution to neutralize any acid present and then flush with clean water. Care must be taken to keep vent plugs tight so that the neutralizing solution does not enter the cells.

To insure good contact, the battery cables should be tight on the battery posts. Check to be sure the terminal clamp has not stretched. This could cause the clamp ends to become butted together without actually being tight on the post. If the battery posts or cable terminals are corroded, the cables should be disconnected by loosening the terminal clamp bolt and removing the clamp with the aid of a puller. Do not twist or pry on the cable to free it from the battery post. Clean the terminals and clamps with a soda solution and a wire brush. After the cables are connected to the battery posts, a thin coat of grease should be applied. The battery ground cable and engine to crossmember ground strap should also be inspected for proper connection and condition.

CAUTION: Explosive gases are present within the battery at all times. Avoid open flames and sparks.

Hydrometer Test

Prior to testing, visually inspect the battery for any damage (broken container, cover, loose post, etc.) that would make the battery unserviceable.

Hydrometer floats are generally calibrated to indicate correctly only at one fixed temperature, 80°F. The temperature correction amounts to approximately .004 specific gravity, referred to as "4 points of gravity." For each 10°F. above 80°F. add 4 points, for each 10°F. below 80°F. subtract 4 points. Always correct the readings for temperature variation. Test the specific gravity of the electrolyte in each battery cell.

Example: a battery is tested at 10°F. and has a specific gravity of 1.240. The actual specific gravity is found as follows:

Number of degrees above or below 80°F.

= 70° (80° - 10°)

70° ÷ 10° (Each 10° difference)

= 7

7 × .004 (Temp. correction factor)

= .028

Temperature is below 80° so temperature correction is subtracted.

Temperature corrected specific gravity =

1.240

- .028

1.212

A fully charged battery should have a specific gravity of 1.250 - 1.265.

75% charge = 1.230

50% charge = 1.200

25% charge = 1.170

Discharged = 1.140

If the specific gravity of all cells is above 1.235, but the variation between cells is more than 50 points (.050), it is an indication of an unserviceable battery, and the unit should be removed from the car for further testing.

If the specific gravity of one or more cells is less than 1.235, recharge the battery at approximately 5 amperes until 3 consecutive hourly readings are constant.

At the end of the charge period, if the cell variation is more than 50 points (.050) replace the battery.

When the specific gravity of all cells is above 1.235 and variation between cells is less than 50 points, the battery may be tested under load as follows:

Light Load Test

A light load test is designed to quickly determine the serviceability of the battery. A light load tester or 0.4 volt voltmeter with cadmium cell probes is used for the test.

IMPORTANT: Allow approximately a minute for the probes to soak and absorb electrolyte prior to reading the voltage of the first cell. Follow the manufacturer's operating instructions
