2 Being the Journal of the Avicultural Society for the Study of Foreign and British Birds November 1895 to October 1896 I have found few birds so interesting in captivity as the family of Herons There are few birds more grace ful or that will become so familiar with their master Of course they are not cage birds in the ordinary sense of the word but anyone with a small piece of ground at the back of his house can easily keep them and will undoubtedly find a fund of amusement in watching them and their habits The size of my aviary is 15 feet by 8 feet by 6 feet high having a pond 3 feet by 2 feet I foot deep at one end It is provided with two good broad perches About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works

The Avicultural Magazine, 1898, Vol. 4 (Classic Reprint) Avicultural Society, 2015-06-30 Excerpt from The Avicultural Magazine 1898 Vol 4 Mr Low obtained them in January 1873 and he states that the native name of the species is Burong puyu puyu Dr Russ informs us that since 1870 single pairs of the Chinese Quail have been occasionally imported that it is much sought after for the bird room and has 011 several occasions been bred that according to Mr E Berin who indeed was the first to breed it it is shy and timid needs a place of retirement one of which he provided in the form of a straw covering leaning against the back wall of the cage or bird rooin At the breeding season the male and female arc continually together the former being gentle and watchful both build the nest even disturbance is to be avoided From the experience of this and other breeders Dr Russ gathers that the laying consists of from four to seven clear brownish generally dark dotted eggs Incubation lasts from sixteen to eighteen days The uestling down is yellowish and the young acquire their full colouring when three months old Early in the present year a good many pairs of this Quail came into the London market and were offered to the public at prices even lower than those noted by Dr Russ Two pairs were offered to me and I was so delighted with the colouring of these quaint little things that I gladly added them to my collection My experience has not altogether coincided with that of Mr Berin as I shall now show When first introduced into a tolerably large aviary I found the Chinese Quails exceedingly nervous so that when I entered the aviary they would fly recklessly upwards striking their heads against the wire netting under the glass roofing and falling heavily to the earth but 110 sooner did they perceive that my intentions were never hostile than they contented themselves with merely running out of my way or leaping in a surprising manner to a raised bank of earth bounded in front by a wall nearly two feet high from the sanded floor At one end of the bank above noted I provided a place of retirement by sticking a row of fir twigs into the earth about six inches from the back wall behind this partial screen the Quails often sat down during the day time sometimes scratching a shallow depression in the soil and dragging in a little hay and a few feathers but at other times they settled down all together in an open corner of the aviary upon the sand and at night they frequently went to roost in another open corner upon a cemented wall About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving
