incidents or mishaps regularly points to human operators as the brittle elements. The need for greater understanding of operator behavior is recognized in a variety of technologically sophisticated systems for example industrial processes, health care, public utilities and national defense but nowhere is it more obvious than in the aftermath of a commercial airline accident. Following the November 1979 crash of an Air New Zealand DC 10 which killed 257 people in Antarctica, United Press International noted that the ten worst disasters in aviation history have all occurred since October 1972. Although the degree of operator culpability varies, the fact that the five deadliest accidents have occurred since March 1974 is particularly significant. At least one commercial airliner was completely destroyed and over 200 people were killed in each of the five crashes. Wide body jetliners, either Boeing 747 or McDonnell Douglas DC 10 aircraft, were involved in each instance. The sheer size of such vehicles portends grave consequences in case of system failure, be it human, mechanical or a combination of the two. Proceedings of the Seventh International Symposium on Aviation Psychology, Richard S. Jensen, David

Neumeister, 1993. Proceedings, 1971 Aircraft Take-off Performance and Risks for Wet and Contaminated Runways in Canada, David C. Biggs, Transportation Development Centre (Canada), 1991. This report documents the results of a study into the risks associated with degraded performance during rejected and continued take off from wet and contaminated runways. A comprehensive review of world wide accident and incident data was undertaken to identify the severity of the problem and the factors involved. Runway condition characteristics, the correlation of runway friction test devices with the friction experienced by aeroplanes and take off performance estimation on wet and contaminated runways were reviewed. Performance estimates were examined on the basis of the ratio of contaminated vs dry friction. A method is outlined for classifying runway conditions based upon ICAO SARPS, FAA, NASA trials and the practices of leading countries and airlines. The frequency of wet and contaminated runways in Canada, the likelihood of critical events on the take off run and the take off weight distribution were determined. These frequency and probability distributions and runway weather and aircraft performance data were used in a probabilistic analysis of the risk of take off accidents. A number of counter measures were examined including the JAR acceptable means of compliance for wet and contaminated runways. The Log, 1969.
