Spirit AeroSystems actualizes Airbus' intelligent design for the A350's center fuselage and front wing spar in Kinston, N.C.

by Lauren Lipton

The Airbus A350-900 is the world's most advanced aircraft, featuring a new fuselage and wing configuration, new engines, the forward and center sections will stay in the Airbus facility in Hamburg, Germany. For each aircraft produced for the first time, Airbus will build the first version of the A350 already equipped with wing, fuselage, tail section and cabin systems, such as air conditioning. The aircraft wings will be assembled by Spirit AeroSystems in Kinston, N.C., just southeast of its Kinston, N.C., plant. The center fuselage, forward section of the A350-900, is the longest of the three, at 115 ft 10 in. It is built up from its double composite panels made by Spirit AeroSystems facilities in Kinston, N.C., and Hamburg, Germany. For the center fuselage and front wing, Spirit AeroSystems' design also incorporates "smart manufacturing" practices. Large components are built up from multiple small, easily manufactured subcomponents that are also easier to repair and maintain. Smart manufacturing concepts also helped Spirit build the A350-900's center fuselage and front wing spar. The ability to adapt to the changing production needs of its customers allows Airbus to focus on Spirit. Intelligent design: Fuselage

A major development of the A350 design is that the new fuselage incorporates smart airframe. The use of large integral structures allows more than 100,000 sq ft of the fuselage to be built with weight optimization. The design is so simple to build the Airbus A350-900 is built up from its double composite panels made by Spirit AeroSystems facilities in Kinston, N.C., and Hamburg, Germany. Because the fuselage section's section line configuration is not constant electrically or with an aluminum alloy structure, the center frame's lightning strike will work any metal parts, such as the fuselage section, for this reason.
