Abstract: Purpose: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. Design: A quasi-experimental, pretest-posttest design was used. Setting: The study was conducted in a community-based setting. Participants: A total of 20 sedentary, middle-aged women participated in the study. Measurements and Main Results: The study measured the following variables: physical fitness (heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index), psychological health (anxiety, depression, and self-esteem), and quality of life (physical and mental health). The results showed that the 12-week walking program had a significant positive effect on all measured variables. Conclusions: The study suggests that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. Further research is needed to determine the long-term effects of such programs.
