Religious Schooling in America Steven L. Jones, 2008-07-30 Advocates of religious schooling have frequently had to answer the charge that what they supported was un-American. In a book that is more than just a history, Jones tries to make sense of that charge by tracing the development of religious schooling in America over the last 125 years. He explores the rationale for religious schooling on the part of those who choose it for their children and in terms of its impact on communities and he considers the arguments of those who criticize such schools for undermining efforts to promote national unity. The book focuses on the gradual embrace of sectarian schooling by different religious communities in America, particularly Catholics, Jews, and later conservative Protestants, mainly in the form of homeschooling. It also considers Muslim schools, not currently a force in private schooling or the subject of much debate, but perhaps next in line to make their case for a place in America's educational landscape. Near the end of the 19th century, publicly financed, publicly administered schooling emerged as the default educational arrangement for American children. But this supremacy has not gone unchallenged. The sectarian schools that in fact predate public education in America have survived, even thrived, over the past century. Multiple religious communities, including those that opposed sectarian schooling in earlier generations, have now embraced it for their children.

A New Agenda for Education Heritage Foundation (Washington, D.C.), 1985. The recurring theme of this volume is that centralized control of education has failed and control of education should be returned to parents and the local community. Five papers are presented that clarify the conservative stance on public education and describe specific measures that could replace liberal concepts and programs:

1. The Demise of the Teaching Profession, Annette Kirk and Russell Kirk
2. Public and Private Schools, K. Alan Snyder
3. The Growth of the Federal Role in Education, Eileen M. Gardner
4. Higher Education Today, Philip F. Lawler
5. The Courts and Education, Thomas R. Ascik

In a summary of the ideas set forth in these papers, a new agenda for education is proposed. Among the recommendations made are: accrediting Master Teachers to foster quality teaching; restoring educational choice to parents through tuition tax credits; establishing English as the sole teaching language; and allowing parents to deduct tuition from their taxes. All contributors recommend the elimination of centralization of educational direction at the federal level, where it is maintained, it falls into the hands of special interest groups and loses its ability to adapt to the diverse schooling needs of local communities throughout the United States.
