Abstract. Today, with a high degree of urbanisation, ‘demolition’ has become a hot topic of discussion, and the product of urban change and renewal is the ‘urban ruin’, which has been developed throughout painting to the present day. The product of urban change and renewal is the ‘urban ruin’, which has been a part of the development of painting up to the present day. The city is full of mystery and is a collection of all kinds of human ‘drama’. As multifaceted beings, urban ruins are a mixture of extinction and solitude, life and poetry. In this paper, we explore how different artists’ paintings on urban themes have recreated the beauty of ‘urban ruins’ and used art forms to bridge the gap between architecture, society and human beings in the urban matrix, which also awakens the artists’ spiritual and emotional attachment, as well as their reflection on the relationship between human beings and society. The rich pictorial expressions in urban ruins are worthy of deeper exploration.

1 Introduction

The rapid urbanisation process, the rapid economic development and the continuous expansion of cities, in this state of high speed and high load development, people enjoy the convenience and beauty brought by the city, on the contrary, the reality of human existence is exceptionally real. “Painting, at its root, is a concrete art, so it can only cover the expression of real and actual things, it is an all material language, every word in this language involves visible and tangible objects, if an object is abstract, invisible and does not exist, then it does not belong to the scope of painting” [1], the value of painting plays a pivotal role.

‘Urban Ruins’ is a collection of urban demolition and urban broken walls and wreckage. It is a memory of the depths of the city. The contrast between this urban state and modern high-rise buildings exudes a unique and charming charm and contains strong emotional value and spiritual realization. The expression of urban ruins in paintings is also liberated from the appearance of urban ruins, and more reflects the social reality, the living state of human beings, and the Chinese and the West take urban ruins as the main body for different forms of artistic expression, which are affected by the living environment and society. Influenced by factors such as the system, history and
