

III. Implementation

A. Initiating and Sustaining

1. Initiating includes the initial planning and implementation of the program, including the following activities:

- 1.1. Identify and analyze the needs and interests of the organization, clients, and the community for the program.
- 1.2. Develop a program that integrates a specific strategy to accomplish the identified needs and interests.
- 1.3. Establish relationships to encourage the organization, clients, and community to work together.
- 1.4. Develop a program. Develop a plan to implement the program and "kick it off."
- 1.5. Establish relationships with clients, community, and other partners, with written documents.
- 1.6. Establish relationships with community and clients. Ensure there are written and oral documents describing the program and how you are meeting the needs of the clients.
- 1.7. Establish relationships with community, but make sure you meet their growing developmental needs.
- 1.8. Establish relationships with community, because they often believe their bodies provide additional resources or products, or services.
- 1.9. Establish relationships with community that resources make significant positive contributions and that should be used more.
- 1.10. Establish relationships with community and community members should be involved, giving community members a voice.
- 1.11. Establish relationships with clients that the clients throughout their journey have needs for power, safety, resources, trust, love, motivation – these are essential to their well-being.
- 1.12. Establish relationships by the use of any method including written, written, electronic, face-to-face, telephone, telephone, electronic.
- 1.13. Establish relationships with clients.
- 1.14. Establish relationships with clients who have job titles that include youth, children, and other.

B. Developing Relationships

Developing relationships is an essential component of any program, including the implementation of the program, planning, implementation, evaluation, and follow-up.

B.1. Developing relationships between clients and program

- 2.1. Establish relationships between clients and the organization for the clients to:
- 2.1.1. Identify and analyze their interests and needs.
- 2.1.2. Develop a relationship with clients that has more opportunities and encourages them to continue the clients' needs.
- 2.1.3. Establish relationships with clients that are consistent with the clients' interests and needs.
- 2.1.4. Establish relationships with clients that are consistent with the clients' interests and needs.
- 2.1.5. Establish relationships that are consistent with the clients' interests and needs.
