Psychic isolation in adolescence and its relation to bodily symptoms

Bodily changes and psychological separation from parents can lead to painful states of psychic isolation for some adolescents, when all that is new cannot be easily expressed or even thought. Although psychic isolation is possible at any age, it is particularly prevalent in adolescence for developmental reasons. I conceive of psychic isolation in adolescence as an affective state with important developmental underpinnings. The affective elements are estrangement and loneliness—and sometimes a feeling of freakishness. The developmental underpinnings include shifting (conscious as well as unconscious, internal as well as external) object relations and senses of the self. While there could be limitless variations of the experience of psychic isolation in adolescence, there is a common developmental trend. I am not referring specifically to teens who are socially isolated, but to an internal state (see Barrett, 2008, who comments that the driven way some adolescents socialize can be misconstrued more as evidence that they are not lonely than as a defense against loneliness).

Transitory or lingering states of psychic isolation are common for adolescents, but also interact with other affective and developmentally related experiences such as rage, rebelliousness, depression, mourning, sexual confusion, spontaneity, individuating, or identity formation. I focus on psychic isolation in this first chapter for two reasons. First, I think it has not been sufficiently discussed in psychoanalytic literature. Psychic isolation is a frequent theme in literature written about adolescents, such as The Member of the Wedding (McCullers, 1946) or Catcher in the Rye (Salinger, 1951), as well as in literature written for adolescents, such as the post-apocalyptic City of Ember series (DuPrau, 2003) (which was described to me at length by a pubescent boy). Second, psychic isolation can leave the adolescent cut off from others who can contain, relegating his body as the likely receptacle for troubles.

Mourning is a fundamental aspect of adolescence (Green, 2013; Wolfenstein, 1966). The adolescent process requires withdrawal from childhood love objects (particularly in relation to authority and to erotic attachment) in order for development to proceed (Katan, 1951). Unconscious mourning of parental love objects is one element that can contribute to psychic isolation, but so can a feeling of strangeness at one's body changing unbidden. A Psychoanalytic Exploration of the Contemporary Search for Pleasure Vaia Tsolas, Christine Anzieu-Premmereur, 2023-07-19. This interdisciplinary collection of essays explores the malaise of the contemporary individual by returning the economic point of view of Freudian thinking, the concept of satisfaction, libido and pleasure/unpleasure principle to their rightful place as the motivating forces of human existence. For Freud, pleasure stands apart from other human experiences, side by side with unpleasure, always a bonus in the search for satisfaction of the pleasure principle and beyond. Along with libido, emotional fulfillment and the capacities for sublimation and play, pleasure has not been given enough attention in the psychoanalytic literature. The editors of this book address this lack and highlight the importance of examining today's social and individual malaise through these specific lenses of inquiry. It is particularly timely and important today to address this lack and thereby examine the impact of the social phenomena of the pandemic, the crises of ideals and virtuality on the subject who feels in a state of constant emergency, overwhelmed, addicted and delibidinalized. With contributions from across psychoanalysis, this book is essential reading for psychoanalysts in training and in practice who want to understand how the modern world has shaped our understanding of pleasure.

The Body in Adolescence Mary Brady, 2015-11-19. The Body in Adolescence: Psychic Isolation and Physical Symptoms examines the affective experience of psychic isolation as an important and painful element of adolescent development. Mary Brady begins by discussing how psychic isolation combined with the intensity of adolescent processes can leave adolescents unable to articulate their experience. She then shows how the therapist can understand and help adolescents whose difficulty with articulation and symbolization can leave them vulnerable to breakdown into physical bodily symptoms. This book introduces fresh ideas about adolescent development in the first chapter. Subsequent chapters include clinical essays involving adolescent patients presenting with bodily expressions such as anorexia, bulimia, cutting, substance abuse and suicide attempts. Attention is also paid to adolescents' use of social media in relation to these bodily symptoms such as their use of online pro-ana or cutting sites. Clinicians can feel challenged or even stymied when presented with their adolescent patient's fresh cut or recent episode of binge drinking Brady uses Bion's conceptualization of containment and the balance of psychotic versus integrative parts of the personality to examine the emergence of concrete bodily symptoms in adolescence Throughout Mary Brady offers ways of understanding and empathically engaging with adolescents This book is essential reading for psychoanalysts and psychotherapists who treat adolescents and other patients with physical symptoms as well as other readers with an interest in the psychoanalytic understanding of these issues Practical Paediatrics Maxwell James Robinson, Don M.
