Abstract: The purpose of this research was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The first session was a warm-up, the second was a cardiovascular workout, and the third was a strength training session. The results showed that the program had a significant positive effect on the women's physical and psychological health. The women who participated in the program showed a significant increase in their physical fitness, as measured by heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index. They also showed a significant increase in their psychological health, as measured by self-esteem, anxiety, and depression. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can have a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract—This study examined the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program on the physical and psychological health of older adults with mild cognitive impairment. The program was designed to improve physical fitness, cognitive function, and social interaction. Results showed that participants who completed the program showed significant improvements in physical fitness, cognitive function, and social interaction compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a supervised exercise program can be an effective intervention for older adults with mild cognitive impairment.
