

AP Biology - Chapter 5 Guided Reading Assignment

1. What is molecular biology and why is it important today?
Molecular biology is the study of biological processes at the molecular level. It is a branch of biology that deals with the study of the structure and function of molecules, particularly nucleic acids and proteins. It is important because it helps us understand the basic processes of life, such as how information is stored and transmitted, and how cells and organisms function.
2. What does a scientist investigate with and what is the difference between a observing and measuring scientific phenomena?
A scientist investigates a problem or phenomenon by observing and measuring it. Observing is the process of gathering information about a phenomenon, while measuring is the process of quantifying that information. The difference between observing and measuring is that observing is a qualitative process, while measuring is a quantitative process. Observing involves gathering information about a phenomenon, while measuring involves quantifying that information.
3. Describe the process and progress of cell fractionation.
Cell fractionation is the process of separating the components of a cell into different fractions. This is done by breaking the cell open and separating the components based on their physical properties, such as size, density, and solubility. The process of cell fractionation is important because it allows scientists to study the function of different cellular components in isolation.

4. Labeling peroxisomes with biotin - structure and function

5. What is a peroxisome and what are peroxisomal enzymes? as it appears in the diagram of cell 5.
A peroxisome is a membrane-bound organelle that contains enzymes involved in the breakdown of fatty acids and the synthesis of lipids. It is a type of organelle that is found in most eukaryotic cells. The diagram of cell 5 shows a peroxisome as a dark, elongated structure with a double membrane and internal structures. The peroxisome is shown with a line indicating its movement towards a yellow oval labeled 'Biotin'.
