changes, these are now choices. We can either choose to live more harmoniously with our environment, or we can choose to pollute, waste and contribute to the decline of the planet. The choice is largely dependent on the values we hold dear and the things we believe in. Therefore, we must take responsibility for the choices we make and the impact they have on the environment and the people who live in it.

However, during their discussions, "these two men" evidently decided, "We must change the way these Republicans are thinkin' and actin' around here. We must not be afraid to do it, we can do it, the community just doesn't see the like this yet, but it's necessary to make these changes and 'fix' what's wrong that been carried." These two men then began to discuss ways to implement these changes, suggesting the community form a community planning committee, "but that's a whole other story, and that's what I'm gonna leave for another time."

However, such discussions are beyond the scope of this paper. Instead, we focus on the first two components and present some of our results.

IP managers, including Raytheon, Boeing, and Northrop Grumman, have also been using the company's software to support their own internal management processes. Boeing, for example, has used the software to support the management of parts, including aircraft parts and other Boeing-owned assets such as aircraft, aircraft components, and aircraft engines. Boeing currently offers several of its software products to other companies, including the "Boeing Connect" program, which connects Boeing and its partners, including other companies, to Boeing's software. Boeing's software, which includes the Boeing and general purpose software, is designed to support the management of parts, including aircraft parts and other Boeing-owned assets, including aircraft, aircraft components, and aircraft engines. negative feedback effects may dominate other, strengthened, local excitatory connections with distant sites on other pyramidal projection neurons. These long-range feedbacks may be mediated via local and nonlocal, recurrent, interneuron networks or by reciprocal thalamic afferent routes. Conversely, the recurrent, pyramidal afferent loops, and the recurrent local feedback loops may be the dominant mechanisms that reduce excitatory local fluctuations. Recurrently-projecting neurons may also provide feedback loops that dampen recurrent, explosive local excitations via the process of "inhibition via feedback", reducing neuron activity levels and neuron local feedback dynamics.
