Avian Conservation Research And Management:

Avian Conservation John M. Marzluff, Rex Sallabanks, 1998 Many bird species throughout the world are in decline or are suffering from unmistakable signs of ill health Such problems often indicate more serious and widespread environmental problems making avian research a critical component of the overall protection of biodiversity Avian Conservation presents the findings and insights of leading avian conservationists from around the world including Frances C James Ian Newton Richard L Hutto John T Rotenberry P Dee Boersma David F DeSante Robert C Fleischer and many others Contributors review current research and identify information gaps that need to be filled if conservation measures are to be effectively carried out They highlight the peril many species are experiencing showcase important projects and present the advice of practicing managers The book features a blend of methodological empirical and applied chapters that introduce new ideas and strategies to working managers and suggest how to most effectively implement research results Sections consider techniques for conserving and monitoring birds approaches for conserving endangered and sensitive species research needs in forested landscapes conservation in nonforested and urban landscapes global variation in conservation needs relevance of conservation to land manager Each section is preceded by a brief introduction that provides a valuable overview of the issue being considered Throughout contributors emphasize three themes that an expanding human population has caused widespread changes in bird habitats that research must be shifted from short term correlative studies of bird abundance to long term experimental studies that measure avian population viability and that a closer relationship needs to be developed between researchers and managers Conservation biologists managers and students interested in the conservation of birds will find the book an important guide and resource

General Technical Report PSW. ,2005 The Journal of Wildlife Management ,2003 A Year in Review for the Pacific Northwest Research Station Pacific Northwest Research Station (Portland, Or.),1998 California Fish and Game ,1999 Repeatability of Riparian Vegetation Sampling Methods ,2004 Tests were conducted to evaluate variability among observers for riparian vegetation data collection methods and data reduction techniques The methods are used as part of a largescale monitoring program designed to detect changes in riparian resource conditions on Federal lands Methods were evaluated using agreement matrices the Bray Curtis dissimilarity metric the coefficient of variation the percentage of total variability attributed to observers and estimates of the number of sites needed to detect change Community type CT cover data differed substantially among the six to seven observers that sampled the same sites The mean within site similarity in the vegetation data ranged from 40 to 65 percent Converting CT data to ratings bank stability successional and wetlands ratings resulted in better repeatability with coefficients of variation ranging from 6 to 13 percent and a percentage of variability attributed to observers of 16 to 44 percent Sample size estimates for the ratings generated from CT cover data ranged from 56 to 224 sites to detect a change of 10 percent between two populations The woody species regeneration method was imprecise The effective ground cover method was quite precise with a coefficient of variation of two but had so little variability among sites that statistically significant change in this attribute would not be expected In general reducing the CTs to ratings increased precision because of the elimination of differences among observers that were not important from the perspective of the rating Studies that seek to detect change at a single site would need to take into account the observer variability described here Studies that seek to detect differences between populations of sites could detect relatively large changes with these methods and ratings Small differences among populations would be difficult to detect with a high degree of confidence unless hundreds of sites were sampled
