- Row 1: The label "Independent variable" points to a box labeled "Independent variable".
- Row 2: The label "Mediator variable" points to a box labeled "Mediator variable".
- Row 3: The label "Moderator variable" points to a box labeled "Moderator variable".
- Row 4: The label "Dependent variable" points to a box labeled "Dependent variable".

The boxes are connected by arrows, showing a sequence of relationships. The first box in each row is connected to the second box, and the second box is connected to the third box. This structure suggests a flow from the independent variable through the mediator and moderator variables to the dependent variable.
