Committee on Planning and Design Policies,1969 Roadway Lighting Ian Lewin,2003 Nighttime visibility has been shown to be influenced by the lamp type used for roadway lighting because the lamp's spectral output can influence sensors in the retina that are active at night This report investigates the nature of these spectral effects and provides an in depth review of available knowledge It also addresses lighting levels and their relationship to driver safety Three candidate lamp types have been analyzed in terms of technical characteristics and associated costs This involves factors such as the efficacy with which the sources produce light lamp life and maintenance characteristics Ideal lighting designs have been performed using the three sources for identical road sections and initial and operating costs have been calculated to assist in contrasting the difference between the sources Bureau of Design and Environment Manual Illinois. Tunnel Lighting Design Procedures Vincent P. Gallagher,1985 Tunnels commonly create bottlenecks in traffic flow because of a change in cross sectional width and a discontinuing of road shoulders past the portal The effect of these restrictions can be congestion and high accident rates unless an adequate lighting system is provided to reveal the locations of walls and curbings The problem is most acute in daytime when drivers make the transition from a brightly illuminated exterior roadway to the tunnel

interior with a much lower luminance level To facilitate the design of a lighting installation which will allow for this transition it is convenient to consider tunnels as being made up of 5 zones 1 the approach zone 2 the threshold zone 3 the transition zone 4 the interior zone and 5 the exit zone Each of these zones has specific lighting levels and lengths depending on the tunnel wall materials tunnel dimensions wall color portal landscaping and traffic characteristics Luminance requirements can vary from 100 fL to 250 fL depending on the tunnel orientation with the sun

Trade-off Between Delineation and Lighting on Freeway Interchanges Robert S. Hostetter,1989 The objective was to determine whether with improved delineation performance at partially lighted interchanges can approach performance under full lighting particularly in rain Two field studies were conducted The first was to determine whether transient visual adaptation TVA influences detection on partially lighted interchanges and could interact with lighting It was shown that TVA occurs under partial lighting and influences detection up to 600 feet from the last luminaire The second field study was to determine the effect of lighting weather and improved delineation on driver performance Data were obtained on two exits in dry and wet weather under full lighting with baseline delineation Data were then obtained under partial lighting with baseline and three improved delineation systems Partial lighting at one exit was with one luminaire at the other with three luminaires
