

8.8.8 Lab: Radioactivity and Radiation Penetration (Sample Data 2.A.2022)

Wynn Probability: 50/50mm (Data)

Answer these questions before beginning the lab. (a) were the significant in which you entered your lab report

1. How are radioactive elements different from a stable element?

Radioactive elements are different from a stable element because they have a half-life, which is the time it takes for half of the atoms in a sample to decay. Stable elements do not have a half-life, which means they do not decay. Radioactive elements are also different from stable elements because they have a half-life, which is the time it takes for half of the atoms in a sample to decay. Stable elements do not have a half-life, which means they do not decay.

2. What information does a radioactive element's half-life tell you about that element?

A radioactive element's half-life tells you how long it takes for half of the atoms in a sample to decay. This information is important in many fields, including medicine, where it is used to determine the age of a sample or the effectiveness of a treatment.

3. Imagine that a radioactive isotope had a half-life of 10 years. In sample A, there are 1000 atoms of the radioactive isotope. How many of the following half-lives would it take for the number of atoms to decrease to 100?

Time elapsed (years)	Number of radioactive atoms remaining
0	1000
10	500
20	250
30	125
40	62.5
50	31.25

4. The graph above is plot of the amount of a radioactive isotope remaining in a sample versus time. Assuming the graph is correct, what is the half-life of the isotope? (b) Explain how you used the graph to determine this information.
