

STRUCTURAL STEELS

PRODUCT AVAILABILITY

Section A3.1 of the Specification for Structural Steel Buildings Allowable Stress Design and Plastic Design, (from here on referred to as the ASD Specification), lists 16 ASTM specifications for structural steel approved for use in building construction.

Six of these steels are available in hot-rolled structural shapes, plates and bars. Two steels, ASTM A514 and A852, are only available in plates. Table 1 shows five groups of shapes and 11 ranges of thicknesses of plates and bars available in the various minimum yield stress* and tensile strength levels afforded by the eight steels. For complete information on each steel, reference should be made to the appropriate ASTM specification. A listing of the shape sizes included in each of the five groups follows in Table 2, corresponding to the groupings given in Table A of ASTM Specification A6.

Seven additional grades of steel, other than those covering hot-rolled shapes, plates and bars, are listed in Sect. A3.1. These steels cover pipe, cold- and hot-formed tubing and cold- and hot-rolled sheet and strip.

For additional information on availability of structural tubing, refer to separate discussion beginning on pg. 1-91. For additional information on availability and classification of structural steel plates and bars, refer to separate discussion beginning on pg. 1-105.

Space does not permit inclusion in the listing of shapes and plates in Part 1 of this Manual of all rolled shapes or plates of greater thickness that are occasionally used in construction. For such products, refer to the various producers' catalogs.

To obtain an economical structure, it is often advantageous to minimize the number of different sections. Cost per sq. ft. often can be reduced by designing this way.

SELECTION OF THE APPROPRIATE STRUCTURAL STEEL

ASTM A36 is the all-purpose carbon grade steel widely used in building and bridge construction. ASTM A529 structural carbon steel, ASTM A572 high-strength, low-alloy structural steel, ASTM A242 and A588 atmospheric corrosion-resistant high-strength low-alloy structural steel, ASTM A514 quenched and tempered alloy structural steel plate and ASTM A852 quenched and tempered low-alloy structural steel plate may each have certain advantages over ASTM A36 structural carbon steel, depending on the application. These high-strength steels have proven economical choices where lighter members, resulting from use of higher allowable stresses, are not penalized because of instability, local buckling, deflection or other similar reasons. They are frequently used in tension members, beams in continuous and composite construction where deflections can be minimized, and columns having low slenderness ratios. The reduction of dead load, and associated savings in shipping costs, can be significant. However, higher strength steels are not to be used indiscriminately. Effective use of all steels depends on thorough cost and engineering analysis.

With suitable procedures and precautions, all steels listed in the AISC Specification are suitable for welded fabrication.

ASTM A242 and A588 atmospheric corrosion-resistant, high-strength low-alloy

*As used in the AISC Specification, "yield stress" denotes either the specified minimum yield point (for those steels that have a yield point) or specified minimum yield strength (for those steels that do not have a yield point).
