"These observations from RGA-2 show much of the same information as the previous series (Boggs et al., 1999). However, the new technique is considerably easier than the classical Photon Emission Spectrometry. The detection of RGA-2 is 10 times more precise than the previous technique and the detection limits may be improved further when used for discrimination, quantification or even for diagnostic purposes. These results also confirm the usefulness of this detector for the detection and quantification of organic pollutants by solid sampling devices."
