Foundations of Government

Section 1: How Does our Government Work? (continued)

A. Foundations and Structure

- Foundations and Structure:
  - From the beginning, the United States government has been separated into three branches to be run by separate people who are not connected to each other. These branches are the executive, legislative, and judicial branches.
  - Government systems throughout the world vary from traditional to modern, but they all have three branches: executive, legislative, and judicial.

B. Separation

- Separation:
  - James Madison, author of the "Federalist Papers," described this process as a "separation of powers."
  - Three branches of government have separate responsibilities and cannot tell each other what to do. The executive branch is responsible for carrying out laws, the legislative branch is responsible for making laws, and the judicial branch is responsible for interpreting laws.

C. Limited Government

- Limited Government:
  - It is limited by separating government officials and their responsibilities and limitations.
  - Three branches of the United States are limited by their effects to their responsibilities. The executive branch cannot make laws, the legislative branch cannot interpret laws, and the judicial branch cannot make laws.

D. Checks and Balances

- Checks and Balances:
  - Three powers of government in the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of government.
  - Government officials receive checks and balances from government agencies. Each agency can check on other agencies that government departments for their effectiveness and validity.

E. Communication in Government

- Communication in Government:
  - It is the communication process. The government uses the three basic branches for government, but the government also needs to communicate with citizens. This is called an "informational communication." Citizens communicate with officials and their agency, family, or government, and officials communicate with each other and with citizens.
  - Most citizens are given choices and can choose which they sufficiency want to be involved in government. Most people choose to be involved in government because of the protection and services that government offers to them. Other citizens choose not to be involved in government. These citizens should receive equivalent free educational resources and free speech-related protections. The law requires that big decisions don't discriminate the citizens.

Summary and Vocabulary

Government officials should work together to communicate all their ideas to society. Government officials can be separated into three branches, but it is important to remember that government systems are designed to be separated. These branches must be able to work together to run the country. The government processes can be separated but must be able to work together, and must be able to interpret laws. There are three branches of government: executive, legislative, and judicial branches. These branches communicate, collaborate, and compromise to run the government. These branches interpret laws and make decisions. These branches interpret laws and make decisions to run the government. These branches interpret laws and make decisions to run the government.
