

Critical Thinking Questions Answer Key

CHAPTER 1

1. The generic name or common name is given to a drug before it becomes official. It may be used by any manufacturer and in any country. The first letter is not capitalized. Nurses are strongly encouraged to learn and refer to drugs by their generic name, since formularies are maintained by generic names. When a therapeutically equivalent drug is available in generic form, a generic medicine is routinely substituted for the brand-name medicine.

The trademark, brand name, or propriety name is followed by the symbol ®. This indicates that the name is registered and that its use is restricted to the owner of the drug, who is usually the manufacturer. These names are easier to pronounce, spell, and remember, and the first letter is capitalized.

2. Body system they affect (e.g., drugs affecting the central nervous system).

Therapeutic use or clinical indications (e.g., antacids, antibiotics).

Physiologic or chemical actions (e.g., anticholinergics).

Prescription or nonprescription (over-the-counter [OTC] drugs). Prescription drugs require an order by a health professional who is licensed to prescribe, such as a physician, nurse practitioner, or pharmacist. Nonprescription drugs are sold without a prescription in a pharmacy or the health section of department or grocery stores.

Illegal drugs: sometimes referred to as recreational drugs, are used for nontherapeutic purposes, have been obtained illegally, or have not received approval for use by the FDA.

3. United States drug resources: American Drug Index; American Hospital Formulary Service; Drug Information; Drug Interaction Facts; Drug Facts and Comparisons; Handbook on Injectable Drugs; Martindale—The Complete Drug Reference; Mosby's Drug Consult; Natural Medicines Comprehensive Database; Physician's Desk Reference (PDR); The United States Pharmacopeia Dispensing Information (USPDI).

Canadian drug resources: Compendium of Pharmaceuticals and Specialties (CPS); Patient Self-Care: Helping Patients Make Therapeutic Choices; Compendium of Self-Care Products.

4. Herbal products are being used to treat many diseases and nutritional deficiencies. It is important for patients to understand the uses, safety, effectiveness, mechanism of action and active ingredients, adverse reactions, interactions, and dosage and administration. This information can be obtained through sources such as the Natural Medicines Comprehensive Database.
 - a. Preclinical research. Discovery, synthesis, and purification of the drug.
 - b. Clinical research and development. Phase 1 determines a drug's pharmacologic properties. Studies require 20 to 100 subjects who take the drug for 4 to 6 weeks. Phase 2 studies smaller patient populations who have the condition that the drug is designed to treat. Phase 3 studies larger populations to ensure statistical significance of results; also proper dosing and safety are addressed.
 - c. New Drug Application. When sufficient data demonstrates that the experimental drug is both safe and effective, the investigator submits a New Drug Application to the FDA. This is reviewed by a team of pharmacologists, toxicologists, chemists, physicians, and others (as appropriate) to then make a recommendation to the FDA. Once it is approved by the FDA, it is the manufacturer's decision as to when to bring a product to the marketplace.
