Abstract The authors examined the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact exercise program on the health-related quality of life of older adults. The program was designed to improve physical and mental health, and to reduce the risk of falls. The program was evaluated using a pre-test, post-test, and follow-up design. The results showed that the program had a positive effect on the health-related quality of life of older adults. The program was well-received by the participants, and the authors concluded that it is a viable option for improving the health-related quality of life of older adults.
