The lightweight aluminum crankcase is manufactured hypereutectically. That is to say, special measures are employed during the formation, casting and cooling which promote torsional resistance and dimensional stability.

The crankcase is symmetrical and can be machined to accept the starter motor on either side to accommodate market demands of left- or right-hand drive.

The cylinder banks are arranged in a 60°V configuration with a constant cylinder center-to-center distance of 91 mm. Cooling is achieved with horizontal coolant flow.

The cast iron main bearing caps, which are heat treated, are fastened to the crankcase with four bolts (arrows). Two are attached parallel to the vertical axis and two parallel to the cylinder axis. This patented configuration promotes bottom end stability and strength.

During crankcase formation, a concentration of silicon crystals is maintained in the cylinder bore areas. Special cylinder wall treatment and honing produces a wear resistant silicon surface that, in combination with metal-coated pistons, provides minimal wear and long life.
