Acceptance and Commitment Therapy for Chronic Pain JoAnne Dahl, Carmen Luciano, Kelly G. Wilson, 2005-04-05 A clinical practice guide to helping chronic pain sufferers live richer more fulfilling lives with pain using acceptance and commitment therapy ACT Living Beyond Your Pain JoAnne Dahl, Tobias Lundgren, 2006 Using mindfulness based techniques and cognitive behavioral tools a leading expert on the use of acceptance and commitment therapy ACT teaches readers to transcend the experience of chronic pain by reconnecting with other more valued aspects of their lives

Integrating Acceptance and Commitment Therapy with Islāmic Psychotherapy for Managing Chronic Pain Razia Bhatti-Ali, 2023-12-20 This book proposes a psychotherapeutic intervention integrating Islāmic Psychology with Acceptance Commitment Therapy ACT for Muslims with chronic pain conditions The first part of the book provides an overview of the challenges of living with chronic pain and illness and explores the cultural expressions of pain and disease and a literature review on culturally adapted psychotherapies An overview of the main components of ACT and their congruence with Islāmic tenets including spirituality and contemplation is provided to propose an Islāmic based ACT approach that aims not to reduce or eliminate pain but rather to help the client build a repertoire of behaviours that lead them towards value based directions The second part of the book outlines a session by session cultural adaptation of the six core processes of ACT interwoven with Islāmic teachings from the Quran and Sunnah The book is supplemented with downloadable resources such as worksheets and handouts that professionals can use in practice This book is intended as a pain management guide for therapists familiar with ACT and Islām It will provide therapists with the tools to deliver a faith adapted evidence based treatment for clients who follow the Islāmic faith Acceptance and Commitment Therapy for Longstanding Chronic Pain in a Community-based Outpatient Group Setting Jennifer Carolyn Plumb Vilardaga, 2012 Chronic pain affects millions of adults each year and has serious costs both economically and on psychosocial well being Acceptance based behavioral treatments have been developed that improve quality of life and reduce disability but additional attention to processes of change responsible for good outcomes is needed While many interventions are effective in the context of comprehensive interdisciplinary treatment centers such settings have limited reach Treatments applicable to smaller community based settings are also needed The current study examined the impact of an outpatient Acceptance and Commitment Therapy group intervention on adults N 28 recruited from the community with heterogeneous longstanding chronic pain as compared to a wait list control group Results showed no between group differences on process or outcome measures Within subjects analyses examining change from baseline at mid treatment post treatment and 4 month follow up indicated trending improvements in pain related disability and depression outcomes with changes in disability at post and follow up in line with clinically meaningful change while quality of life and pain severity did not improve ACT processes of pain related avoidance and success at living leisure and relationship values improved at post and follow up with medium to large effect sizes while mindfulness and coping strategy use did not improve Limitations include small sample size high attrition and low participant engagement Despite the fact that changes observed cannot be directly attributed to the intervention important information was gleaned about the feasibility of adapting interventions to community settings and recommendations for next steps in such endeavors are discussed

Acceptance and Commitment Therapy for Chronic Pain Marnie Ruth Johnston,2008 Online Acceptance and Commitment Therapy for Chronic Pain in a Sample of People with Chiari Malformation Monica Garcia,2021 Objective Chronic pain is a complex disorder often presenting with comorbid anxiety depression and sleep dysfunction each of which perpetuates pain related symptomatology Acceptance and Commitment Therapy ACT an intervention based on increasing engagement in valued activities and decreasing experiential avoidance is an empirically supported treatment for chronic pain However face to face interventions are costly and require trained clinicians to administer In an attempt to increase the accessibility of effective treatments research has begun to explore the efficacy of online ACT interventions for chronic pain with positive results Given the complex combinations of disorders that often present with chronic pain an intervention that broadly teaches ACT philosophies without focusing only on pain may facilitate the generalization of skills to comorbid conditions and provide more comprehensive treatment The present study administered a broad online ACT intervention that is able to flexibly address participants changing symptom presentations and aimed to examine the efficacy of this intervention Method 53 adults ages 18 65 with Chiari Malformation CM a disorder characterized by chronic pain were randomized into either the treatment or control group Both groups completed baseline assessments followed by 8 weekly assessments of pain interference anxiety depression sleep dysfunction chronic pain acceptance and psychological flexibility the treatment group also completed 8 weekly online intervention modules All participants also completed an assessment immediately following the intervention and at 1 month post intervention Multi level modeling utilized all assessment time points to examine group differences in symptom trajectories between baseline and 1 month follow up Results Significant group differences were identified in the trajectories of sleep dysfunction psychological flexibility and chronic pain acceptance including both the activity engagement and pain willingness subscales However there were no significant group differences in pain interference or depression and a group by time interaction predicting anxiety symptoms was only trending towards significance Psychological flexibility was a significant predictor of sleep dysfunction but it did not serve as a mediator of sleep dysfunction over time Conclusion The current study provides preliminary evidence supporting the use of this online intervention to teach ACT philosophies The treatment group exhibited significant improvement in psychological flexibility chronic pain acceptance pain willingness and activity engagement The impacts on sleep dysfunction significant group differences identified but a large percentage remained above the cutoff for moderate insomnia anxiety depression and pain interference were as not noteworthy This indicates that some alterations may be needed in the intervention to effectively target these symptoms

Psychosocial Interventions for Chronic Pain in Women and Girls Laura A.

Payne,2025-09-29 This book is the first comprehensive edited volume focused on treatment approaches for chronic pain specifically in women and girls Utilizing evidence based psychosocial techniques it is directly applicable to the work of all mental health practitioners and provides a rich resource of descriptions of chronic pain conditions that predominantly or uniquely impact women and girls as well as practical guidance for implementing treatment enriched by detailed case studies Since chronic pain in women and girls is often minimized or dismissed in the medical setting this book provides new insights into the understanding and management of chronic pain specifically in the female population

Older Women with Chronic Pain Jana A. Pochop,2011 This project explored the issues of chronic pain and its impact on the lives of older women The introduction provided definitions and an introduction to theories of pain Western treatments for chronic pain and their limitations were discussed The review of the literature documented that neither medical interventions nor psychological treatments offer relief to all chronic pain sufferers and in particular to older women This paper reviewed the research evaluating the efficacy of acceptance and commitment therapy in the treatment of chronic pain indicating that these women may benefit from group counseling using this evidence based approach A long term acceptance and commitment therapy group is proposed as a means to assist older women with chronic pain with the primary goal of helping them to live active lives in accordance with their values in spite of the presence of persistent pain Abstract p 1 Zoning Ordinance ,195? Reading Literature and Chronic Pain Josie Billington,2025-05-15 This valuable and insightful study into chronic pain and its treatment advances a striking analysis of the complex phenomenon of chronic pain also attesting to the importance of the medical humanities in addressing urgent questions that medical science alone cannot resolve The primary purpose of this book is twofold First to demonstrate empirically against a conceptual background drawn from multiple disciplines and knowledge bases historical medical neurobiological psychological socio anthropological how an apparently soft intervention such as literary reading can effectively combat symptoms of a condition as intractable as chronic pain Second to explore what this evidence tells us about pain as a lived experience as well as a condition in urgent need of new treatment options and about literature and the reading of fiction and poetry as therapeutic influences in contemporary health and healthcare most particularly in alleviating the often severe mental health difficulties with which chronic pain is almost universally associated Based on unique empirical research with people who are living with chronic pain this book is the first of its kind to demonstrate the value of literature and literary reading both as a discourse for understanding and finding pain and as an intervention in its treatment Chronic Pain Philip Austin,2017-10-01 The effective management of pain is a problem which confronts all manual therapists This book provides a clear picture of our current understanding of pain mechanisms and shows how that knowledge should inform approaches to treatment The knowledge of pain science that the book conveys will help the therapist select the best approach to the clinical management of each patient Different types of pain disorder may require different management strategies which may involve only one discipline or at other times a multidisciplinary team which may also include medical clinicians psychologists occupational therapists nurses and other healthcare practitioners as well as manual therapists The book is divided into three parts An introduction to the concept of pain and its neurophysiological mechanisms A review and discussion of current and potential evidence based evaluation methods A review and discussion of common types of functional pain disorders This approach provides readers with a comprehensive reference to evidence based information that should enable them to manage their clients pain as effectively as possible Digital Acceptance and Commitment Therapy for Adults with Chronic Pain Charlotte Gentili,2022

OUTCOMES AND PROCESSES OF PSYCHOLOGICAL FLEXIBILITY DURING ACCEPTANCE AND COMMITMENT THERAPY (ACT), GROUP BASED TREATMENT FOR PATIENTS WITH CHRONIC PAIN IN A RHEUMATOLOGY CONTEXT
Siobhan O'Neill, 2017 ACT pronounced as one word is a type of Cognitive Behavioural Therapy that promotes a therapeutic process known as Psychological Flexibility. A key feature of this therapy in the context of chronic pain is that it focuses on behaviour change rather than symptom reduction only. This was a prospective study which aimed to design, implement and evaluate ACT based group interdisciplinary rehabilitation programmes for people with chronic pain attending rheumatology services. Data was collected at three time points: at assessment, on the last day of the interventions and at a 6 month review date following completion of the programme. Four self-report measures and two objective measures were used to collect data for the primary outcomes. To examine the processes of psychological flexibility, a further four validated measures were included at each time point and these mapped onto the content of the programme. Paired t tests and repeated measures ANOVA were used to test differences between time points. Results showed statistically significant improvements across all the primary outcome measures except for pain. Improvements made during the eight week programmes were maintained at follow up for all the measures. These are the first trials examining ACT for chronic pain that were carried out in a rheumatology context only. As such they add to the existing evidence for the effectiveness of Acceptance and Commitment Therapy for chronic pain.
