

AP Biology - Chapter 5 Guided Reading Assignment

1. What is molecular biology and why is it important biology?
Molecular biology is the study of biological processes at the molecular level. It is a branch of biology that deals with the study of the structure and function of molecules, particularly nucleic acids and proteins. It is important because it helps us understand the basic processes of life, such as how information is stored and transmitted, and how cells and organisms function.
2. What does a scientist investigate with and what is the difference between a observing and measuring scientific phenomena?
A scientist investigates a problem or phenomenon by observing and measuring it. Observing is the process of gathering information about a phenomenon, while measuring is the process of quantifying that information. The difference between the two is that measuring involves the use of a standard unit of measurement, while observing does not. For example, a scientist might observe that a plant is growing, but they would measure the height of the plant in centimeters.
3. Describe the process and purpose of cell fractionation.
Cell fractionation is the process of separating the components of a cell into different fractions. This is done by breaking the cell open and separating the different parts. The purpose of cell fractionation is to study the function of different cellular components. For example, a scientist might want to study the function of a specific organelle, such as the mitochondrion. By isolating the mitochondria from a cell, the scientist can study their function in more detail.

4. Labeling peroxisomes with biotin - structure and function

5. What is a protein and what is its function? (What is the difference between a protein and a nucleic acid?)
A protein is a large molecule made of amino acids. It is the basic unit of structure and function in a cell. Proteins are responsible for a wide range of functions, including catalyzing chemical reactions, providing structural support, and regulating cellular processes. Nucleic acids, on the other hand, are made of nucleotides and are responsible for storing and transmitting genetic information. The difference between a protein and a nucleic acid is that proteins are made of amino acids and are responsible for a wide range of functions, while nucleic acids are made of nucleotides and are responsible for storing and transmitting genetic information.
