future of the Universe Can the biblical narratives of creation and new creation have a fruitful dialogue with scientific discoveries David Wilkinson shows what a fruitful dialogue this can be Critiquing the folk eschatology of the Left Behind series the misguided faith of the scientific optimists and the lack of scientific engagement of the theologians of hope Wilkinson argues for a rediscovery of the theological theme of new creation and the centrality of bodily resurrection A Faith that Loves the Earth Michael W. Petty,1996 This book presents the argument that Karl Rahner s theology has a profoundly ecological dimension In this argument ecological theology is understood to be a kind of theology which views the natural world as a worthy object of concern an object which demands theological interpretation The work undertakes an analysis of four models of ecological theology feminist process incarnational sacramental and Hegelian The study argues that any theology which aspires to be ecological must at least address the questions of human being s relation to the world God s relation to the world and the place of the material world in the process of salvation Rahner s theology is examined in light of his answers to these questions in successive chapters which deal with his theological anthropology doctrine of God understanding of the Incarnation and eschatology What emerges from this examination is a truly ecological theology a theology which understands human being the world and God as fundamentally related without reducing any one of these especially God to the others In this way this book seeks to show that working from a profoundly non dualistic metaphysical vision rooted in an interpretation of the Incarnation Rahner develops a thoroughly ecological position which can adequately answer the three crucial questions mentioned above The conclusion of this book suggests ways in which Rahner s insights might be appropriated RIC. ,1990 Paperbound Books in Print ,1992 Theology on the Tyume Samuel Abrahams,Jeremy Punt,D.
