Management Stuart Wilde,2023-11-28 Stuart undertook formal Benefits Programme and Portfolio Management training and has been employed as a Benefits Manager in Projects Programmes and Portfolio Offices P3Os and In Service BaU teams in Public and Private Sector organisations since 2014 It took Stuart time to implement effective Benefits Management despite attending formal training because there was no practical guide available there was varied and competing views on the subject and a successful approach with support from the organisation was hard to find Indeed much time had been spent on circular conversations trying to understand the subject confusion and language A structured informed guide could have saved significant time and money Stuart used the lived experience to inform this guide and approach so the P3Os and In Service BaU teams can see it's practical application Stuart removes the jargon gets to the point and seeks to save time so Benefit Managers can work effectively and at pace and develop their knowledge and skills using an accepted approach to boost performance Stuart would like to thank all stakeholders who were involved either directly or indirectly for their interactions influence and exchanges and a special thank you to Paul Carter for his time and assistance

Success Determinants of Benefits Realisation Management Pauline

Sehlabela,2020 Although benefits realisation management was developed and has been practised for over 20 years its adoption and implementation have been low and ineffective Most organisations lack matured BRM process with only 40% of projects aligned to organisational strategy Matured organisations have implemented strong governance which leads to the prioritisation of projects with relevant benefits However most organisations lack this competency and hence struggle to gain acceptance On the other hand academia has focused on how benefits are established and have ignored BRM adoption and implementation challenges This creates a gap between theory and practises of BRM Furthermore few studies focus on BRM change management benefit measurement and benefit ownership and capabilities to enhance adoption and implementation Thus this study explored the critical elements that enhance BRM adoption and implementation within organisations A qualitative exploratory research method was adopted for this study The use of the semi structured open ended questionnaire with 14 BRM experts executives programme directors and managers were interviewed The participants represented six different sectors across South Africa including banking state owned enterprises SOE financial services insurance consulting services and logistics The results firstly reflected that stakeholder awareness buy in and change management strategies enhance BRM adoption in organisations Secondly participants highlighted that BRM ownership and benefit measurement are critical elements that enhance implementation Thirdly benefits identification should be aligned with organisational strategy and should be supported by a feasible and viable business case Fourth adequate benefit planning execution and tracking should be carried out to support BRM implementation Lastly BRM should be associated with value management which is a well known concept and this enhances its adoption The study concluded with a BRM adoption and implementation framework aimed to assist organisations to practically identify prioritise and address BRM adoption and implementation challenges in organisations The study contributed towards academic literature and extended the Crainfield BRM framework
