5.1 Introduction

In the previous unit, we discussed the meaning of listening, some obstacles to listening and methods that can be adopted for better listening in the workplace. Writing skills are equally crucial and critical similar to listening skills in business communication. Errors in grammar, spelling, punctuation and typing can affect the business communication significantly. Any inconsistency in writing the message might lead to misunderstanding or miscommunication. Therefore, in business communication, clarity and concreteness of the message is very vital. You might lose your customer if you fail to communicate the information correctly and completely. At the same time, you must remember that general writing is very different from business writing in terms of tone, language and degree of formality of the communication. Some of the dos and don'ts of business writing will be highlighted in this unit. This will lay the foundation for writing business letters and reports which will be discussed in the later units.
