1. The first step is to identify the components of the system. This involves a thorough review of the system architecture and the components involved. The next step is to determine the relationships between the components and how they interact with each other. This is done by creating a system diagram that shows the flow of data and the control signals between the components. Once the system diagram is complete, the next step is to identify the potential failure modes of the system. This is done by performing a failure mode and effects analysis (FMEA) on the system. The final step is to develop a test plan that will verify the system's performance and ensure that it meets the required specifications. This involves identifying the test cases, the test procedures, and the test results.
