- 1) Have students number off 6s – S, O, A, P, S, and Tone
- 2) Have them report to their assigned letter, and give students a set time per letter to have every student write an observation based on the letter and questions given. (5-7 min per station)
- 3) Have students rotate. When they get to the new station, have them first read over what is already there. Then they should add to this. I like to have them rotate so they are writing at 3 stations.
- 4) Give each group a sharpie. Have the first group circle the 2-3 pieces of evidence they think are strongest about the letter.
- 5) Have students rotate. They should read everything at their new station and then they have 2-3 check marks to give out or circles – they can put a check if they think what was already circled is the strongest, OR they can circle a new piece of evidence in their color. Repeat this process so students get to each station.
- 6) Go over them to fill in the chart in the book, synthesizing answers and projecting on the board to show what peers validated, etc.
