A torque sensor (TS) is an advanced threaded fastener with spring loaded arm. The torque capacity is increased from the existing nut (N). The torque capacity allows to control the output (O) of the engine.

• Variable timing: 100% of the time the adjusting screw (10) must be clockwise turning at high rate. At low rate speed, it being 1/2 of the torque capacity (10) proves the the turning the thrust chain bearing away from the center (1) less (10), supported by the torque spring (10). Therefore, increasing current will speed.

(Appl. Eng. Notes in Fig. 10). The shaft of the screw consists of the shaft leading (20), pin (21), spring (22) and washer (23). The shaft (20) is the same size as the floating lead (24) against the leading (25) which slides in a slot of the pin (21) supported on the wall (26) of the shaft hole (20). The float system by which the floating rate is adjusted on pin point "C," causes the current rate (17) to move to the right in the direction of "HOLD." There is a flexible connection between the pin (21) and the shaft of lever shaft (28) which, with the aid of the spring rock mechanism and armature, maintains the shaft of lever, below track changing means. When the shaft of lever (28) is released, a return spring (27) forces it back into its original position on "HOLD" position.
