

1 | Overview

The BMS100 keypad is a 100% bus compatible device. Each keypad has user adjustable options such as volume and display brightness, and an LCD display that shows two-line system messages. The keypad features capacitive keys. The BMS100 connects to the BMS bus on the control panel using terminal wiring. You can connect more than one keypad to the control panel by wiring them in parallel. You can program, display, and troubleshoot the system from the control panel keypad as well as remotely through Remote Programming Software (RPS).

You can wire up to 4 inputs to the keypad.

2 | Set the address switches

Two switches determine the address for the keypad. The control panel uses the address for communications. Use a digital screwdriver to set the switches.

2.1 Address the address switches

1. Connect the keypad by turning the back counter-clockwise. Refer to Figure 2.1.
2. Hold the keypad by the base in one hand. With the other hand, gently push down on the keypad to release it from the base. Refer to Figure 2.2.
3. Look at the back of the keypad, and locate the switches.

2.2 Set the address switches

Set the address switches per the control panel configuration. If multiple BMS100 keypads share the same system, each BMS100 keypad must have a unique address. For single-digit addresses 1 through 9, set the base switch to 0. Figure 2.3 shows the address switch setting for address 1.

2.3 Understand addresses and point numbers

To determine the point numbers for each keypad address, multiply the address number by 10 for the base number, and then use numbers 1 through 4 in the area place for the point numbers.

Example

For BMS100 address 01 the point numbers for the input devices are 111 through 114.

Terminal number	1	2	3	4
Point number	111	112	113	114

For BMS100 address 10 the point numbers for the input devices are 111 through 114.

Terminal number	1	2	3	4
Point number	111	112	113	114

3 | Installation

After you set the address switches for the proper address, mount the keypad back, wire to the control panel, and attach the keypad to the base.

3.1 Mount the keypad

You can surface mount the keypad, or mount it to standard electrical boxes, including single and double gang boxes.

Mounting the keypad

1. Use the base as a template to mark the desired mounting surface. Refer to Figure 3.1 for mounting hole and wiring locations.
2. Push the wiring through the desired wire opening in the base.
3. Use the appropriate mounting hardware (supplied) to mount the base to the desired mounting surface. Refer to Figure 3.1 for mounting hole and wiring locations.

3.2 Wire to the control panel

When you wire the keypad to a control panel, use the control panel terminals labeled 5, 1, 6, 8 (Panel, 4, 8, 10/8). Connect them to the keypad terminals labeled 5, 1, 6, 8. Refer to Figure 3.1.

You can connect keypads to the BMS data bus in parallel wire run from the control panel to each keypad, wire from keypad to keypad, or a combination of the two techniques. Refer to Figure 3.1.

Reconnect the keypad to the base by sliding the keypad into the base (reverse of Step 2). The keypad automatically locks into the base. Apply power to the system.

4 | Sensor loop wiring

To wire detection devices to the BMS100 keypad, connect them to the keypad terminals labeled for 1, 2, 3, 4, and COM. Wire resistance on each sensor loop must be less than 100 Ω with the detection device connected. The terminal strip supports 10 to 10 AWG (0.05 to 2 mm) wires.

The keypad detects open, short, normal, and ground fault circuit conditions on its sensor loops and transmits the conditions to the control panel. Each sensor loop is assigned a point number and terminals to the control panel individually. Four wires come from the premium telephone and RJ wiring. Refer to Figure 3.3.
