Whether written by a school psychologist, BCBA, or skilled practitioner of any variety, all behavior intervention plans face the same difficulty: the writer and implementer are not the same person. Too frequently, successful BIPs are discounted and discarded by those responsible for implementation. Many BIPs are simply filed rather than followed. Without additional burden to time-constrained professionals, this book addresses how to effectively and efficiently increase implementation fidelity. Using a systems analysis approach to school climate interwoven with ample case studies, school psychologists will be guided through eleven chapters of a step-by-step process to effectively create and implement behavior intervention plans. Connecting High-Leverage Practices to Student Success Melissa C. An Evaluation of Behavior Intervention Plans Carly Parkinson Atchley, 2021 Behavior Intervention Plans BIPs are used in public schools for students with disabilities replacing target behaviors with socially appropriate behaviors using positive behavior support strategies However research suggests that BIPs are often poorly written or fail to be implemented as intended One reason for the ineffectiveness of BIPs may be that the interventionist e g classroom teacher or other staff member responsible for implementing the plan and the context of his her classroom is not considered when plans are written by specialists e g school psychologist special education teacher etc The purpose of this study was to evaluate BIPs written and used for students in public schools in the intermountain west for their contextual fit using a researcher developed measure of contextual fit based on key concepts previously established in research and modeled after the Behavior Support Plan Quality Evaluation Second Edition BSP QE II With the coding guide created by our research team we coded previously collected BIPs for practicality the skill level and competency required for the interventionist to implement and the consideration of cultural values for both the interventionist and the student who would receive the intervention In addition a previous research study by a graduate student at the same university had previously coded BIPs from the four school districts in Utah for technical adequacy using the BSP QE II and using the results from that study we ran a Pearson correlation to determine whether there was a statistically significant relationship between BIP quality and contextual fit Ultimately our study found that BIPs often failed to include all elements for contextual fit to reasonably be considered established particularly in the cultural values of those who would implement or receive the plan In addition we found a moderate positive relationship between BIP technical adequacy and contextual fit Implications for practitioners and ideas for future research are also discussed including ensuring that BIPs are developed in teams that include the interventionist creating BIP templates that are culturally and contextually appropriate and the possibility of research that documents actual interventionist participation in BIP team meetings as a comparison to the results of our scoring guide of BIP contextual fit
