

Evolution of Social Behavior: Individual and Group Selection

Theodore C. Bergstrom

"A selector of sufficient knowledge and power might perhaps obtain from the genes at present available in the human species a race combining an average intellect equal to that of Shakespeare with the stature of Carnera. But he could not produce a race of angels. For the moral character or for the wings he would have to await or produce suitable mutations."

—J.B.S. Haldane (1932, p. 110)

What can our evolutionary history tell us about human motivations and social behavior? The genes that influence our own behavior are copies of copies of copies of genes that have guided our ancestors to survive and to reproduce. If selfish behavior leads to reproductive success, then we should expect our genes to impel us toward selfishness. Thus, Richard Dawkins (1976, pp. 2–4) observed:

If we were told that a man lived a long and prosperous life in the world of Chicago gangsters, we would be entitled to make some guesses as to the sort of man he was . . . . Like successful Chicago gangsters, our genes have survived, in some cases for millions of years, in a highly competitive world . . . . If you look at the way natural selection works, it seems to follow that anything that has evolved by natural selection should be selfish.

Sir Alexander Carr-Saunders (1922), a sociologist who pioneered studies of demography and social evolution, took an opposing view. Carr-Saunders maintained that evidence from primitive cultures suggests that prehistoric humans clustered into groups that inhabited well-defined areas between which migration
