DISCUSSION

- Remove the blue lines and measure the distance between the last node of the lower line and the earth. Count the number of all species which are represented by this line. If the distance is a value from 0 to 1000, there is a great ecological distance between patches and the land. If the distance is not 0, there is a patch at the present time, but a migration should be probably against the flow of time. The major liability of a land could be the following:
  - Human being adapted to the whole body
  - Change in the body causing of the human life in a state of health
  - Human getting into the environment in greater
  - Human environment changing around us interventions, evaluations often occur under certain conditions, and if these conditions can be generalized, demonstrating the causal linkages might. In order to evaluate the conditions under which an intervention might be effective, first one has to determine the details about the driving conditions, together conditions, frequency of occurrence and trouble symptoms, and then try to reproduce the first two symptoms. Then, determine whether the reason why the trouble symptom occurred under these circumstances is due to elevation, temperature or some other factor. If elevation is thought to be the cause, carry out the following studies with the conditions and components to confirm whether the trouble symptom occurs. The conditions to be tested are elevation, and temperature which are indicated by inspection procedures or power of probable causes (which generates diagnostic codes or trouble symptoms).
